

How have the recent terrorist scares affected your daily life?

Photos by Miguel Morales

Patricia Zabregian
Graduate, Psychology

"I am stuck eating Cafeteria food; I can't walk around to the restaurants anymore."

Melissa Laracuenta
Graduate, Psychology

"I didn't want to get on the subway."

Marcus Chang
Junior, English

"Things I didn't really worry about before, I worry about now. I'm afraid of anthrax, the sound of loud planes, and I will not drink tap water."

Nick Zerilli
Junior, Finance

"If we are going to die, we are going to die. Whatever happens will happen. If they should rebuild, I'll work on the 110th floor."

Rita Iglesias
Sophomore,
International Marketing

"There is more inconvenience than fear. I used to have a 10 to 15 minute commute; now it is an hour."

Deborah Almieda
Post-Graduate,
Psychology

"My decisions are thought out more--what train, what street should I go down. I have also avoided watching television; it's hard enough to be down here."

